For many years this last term has been applied more especially to the disease as it manifests itself in the human being, but even in this case it is a misnomer, and the sooner it is done away with and banished from both scientific and ordinary dictionaries the better. Derived from the two Greek words hudor, water, phobos, fear, it indicates a symptom found in certain cases in man, but by no means invariably, and only rarely met with in dogs and other animals. The apparent dread of all liquids in man is more especially intensified by the fact that all attempts to swallow are extremely painful, even in the case of solid food, and spasm of the larynx, pharynx and sophagus being brought about by the attempted ingestion of liquids. There is no fear of the liquid itself; it is the paroxysm that is almost certain to follow its being swallowed or even an attempt at swallowing it, that is much feared and dreaded by the human being. Because a dog drinks water let not the mistake be made of saying that he is not suffering from rabies. During the first stages of the disease, the dog drinks water ravenously,...
